Campaign propaganda is a form of advertisement, where the product is you, the candidate. There are six main strategies that work: stacking the deck, testimonials/endorsements, plain folks, negative ads, glittering generalities, and guilt by association or coat tailing. Background information from BGE (background essay)

I wanted to somehow link the idea of propaganda to today's society and challenge the students to think about how propaganda may be used today. When I started my DBQ project I wanted to show how propaganda was used throughout history and see how propaganda evolved throughout the years.

~~The Power of Propaganda: A Student Designed DBQ - Copy / Paste~~

Propaganda is used to "sell" a candidate or a belief to the public, whether by ruining the opponent's chances of victory, or by falsely advertising an idea of their own as better than one of their opponents. Much propaganda is gone for deprecating rivals, making them appear to be dishonest or ignorant.
